

From Optical Lattices to Quantum Crystals

V I YUKALOV^{1,2}

¹*Bogolubov Laboratory of Theoretical Physics, Joint Institute for Nuclear Research, Dubna, Russia*

²*Institute of Physics in Sao Carlos, University of São Paulo, São Carlos, Brazil*

Contact Email: yukalov@theor.jinr.ru

Optical lattices are considered, composed of atoms which can exhibit strong interactions between different lattice sites. With increasing intersite interactions, there can appear several lattice states, such as conducting optical lattices, insulating optical lattices, delocalized quantum crystals, and localised quantum crystals.